Abstract

In this article I describe two manuscripts of Targum Chronicles that, for different reasons, were not used in editions and studies of Targum Chronicles. The first is a manuscript Berlin, SB Or. fol. 4, Bible with a complete set of Targums. I analyze this manuscript and point out its resemblance to manuscript Berlin, SB Or. fol. 1210–1211 (a.k.a. Targum Berlin) and manuscript Dresden, SLUB, A.46. Thought to have been lost during the Second World War, this manuscript is in fact partly legible and supplies an important additional witness for the textual tradition of Targum Chronicles. Based on this newly available data I demonstrate the complexity of the textual traditions of Targum Chronicles and the need for a re-evaluation of its transmission and reception.

1 Introduction

One of the objectives of the project 'TEXTEVOLVE' is to identify and analyse previously unstudied Targumic material. In the following pages I will present newly discovered manuscripts of Targum Chronicles (hereafter TgChron), which for one reason or another became—or were considered to be—lost, either due to human affairs, accidents, or simple oversight.
